AB 205 Huey
In Italian Army Service
(Italian Aviation Series)

Giancarlo Gastaldi

The very image of the helicopter, known by everyone, fans and non-experts. To anyone thinking of a helicopter, from the mid-fifties the 205 comes to mind. "The Huey" produced by Bell in the United States and under license, by Dornier in Germany, Agusta in Italy, AIDC in Taiwan and Fuji in Japan, more than 20,000 examples divided into a dozen of main versions with a myriad of variants and in service in more than seventy air forces over the past sixty years. Its fame originates from the extensive use by the United States Army during the Vietnam War, of which has become the symbol, as was the Jeep in World War II. The characteristic "Flap Flap" of the rotors, which announced their coming even before they are seen, gave the soldiers the certainty of the arrival of supplies, rescue or close air support.

AMX GHIBLI
(Italian Aviation Series)

Federico Anselmino, Giancarlo Gastaldi

Pictures of Inited Ghibli directly from our personal archives, some referring to the initial operational use!. Aviation Collectables Company is the only publishing house in the catalog, at WORLD level, which we are very proud of, a volume entirely dedicated to this aircraft, often mistreated for its numerous "dentition" troubles. In fact, the AMX "Ghibli" is considered a second-choice aircraft by enthusiasts, certainly not as fascinating as a last generation fighter but our "Ghibli", after a slightly subdued online entry, has largely redeemed and participated to all the main military operations in which the Aeronautica Militare was involved. This unique book tells the story of AMX, from early drawings to war use, with an eye for the engagement in Afghanistan, with countless exclusive photos.

G.80/G.82 The First Italian Jet Trainer (Italian Aviation Series)

Federico Anselmino

Only a few days to December 9th, that date is important because on that day, in 1951, it made the first flight G.80, the first Italian jet trainer. Although produced in Turin the historical flight happened to Amendola, military airport where the prototype was transported from Turin. The choice was obligatory because the Turin track was not long enough to guarantee operations with the new FIAT airplane. The history of the G.80, and of the subsequent improved version, the G.82, deserve to be known. The fifties, in Italy, were the pioneering times of the design of the first jets, the industries were trying to recover from the recent destruction of the war and were looking for markets to restart production. In this context the FIAT initiative, at the time led by prof. Valletta, who authorized Ing. Gabrielli to the project.

IL THUNDERJET IN ITALIA" continua il successo

Luigino Caliaro

"The Thunderjet in Italy", continues the success of the new book by di Luigino Caliaro. The twenty-one chapters describe in detail the F-84G Thunderjet, from the genesis of the project to use in the USA with the USAF, through the Korean War, to arrive at delivery and use in Italy. Luigino Caliaro accurately describes the use of the F-84 in the Aerobrigate. An important chapter with mostly unpublished photos, is dedicated to the shooting competitions of the 56th TAF, typical of the fifties. All the acrobatic chasers who used the Thunderjet are told how an important part of the book is dedicated to the description of the cockpit, armaments, chapters that talk about the Thunderjet in flight, the engine and the color of the F-84G. The book closes with a chapter dedicated to the construction of a F-84G in 1/48 scale.
